Introducing Stackabl, a tech solution that converts textile and manufacturing waste into bespoke, acoustic lighting and furniture.

America stands at a critical juncture. With a staggering 17 million tons of textile waste produced annually, the nation ranks as the second largest textile waste producer worldwide. Alarmingly, only 1% of these textiles are recycled, making textiles the 5th most common landfill occupant despite their high potential for reuse and recycling. The tide is turning, however, as legislation both in the U.S. and the EU tightens its grip on producers of textile products. A prime example is California's Extended Producer Responsibility Act, which mandates brands to shoulder a collective $500 million to divert textile from waste streams.

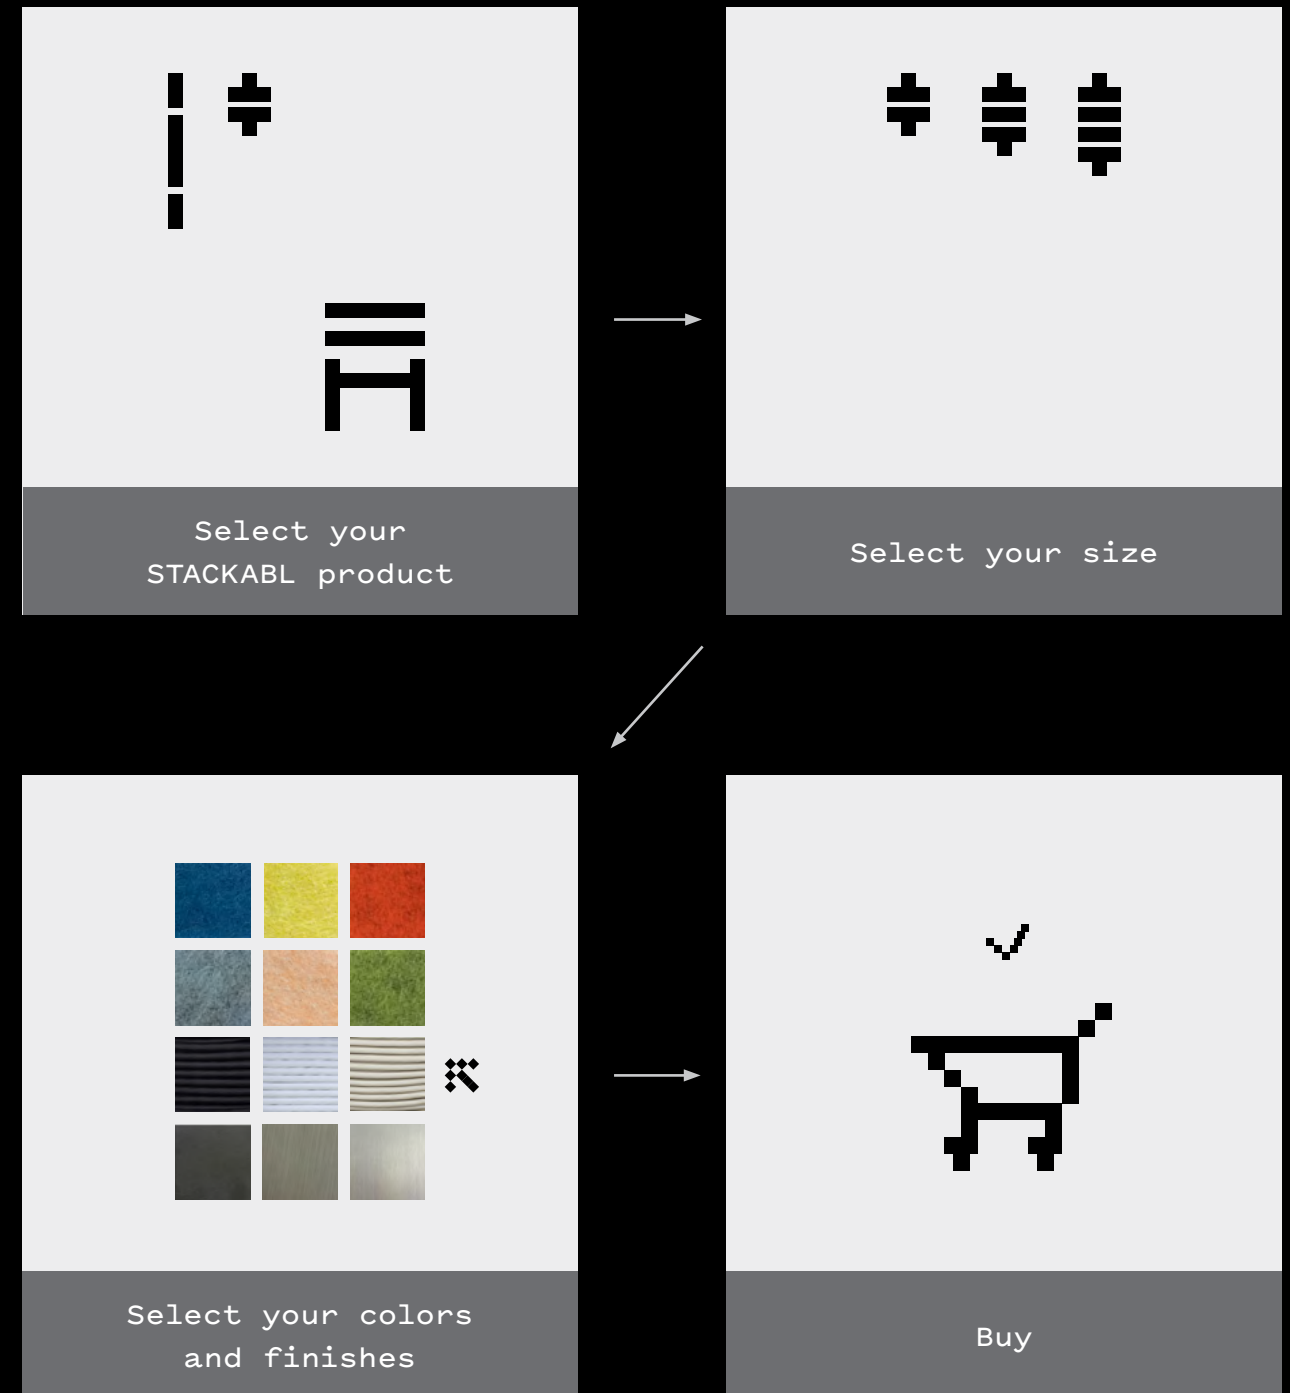

In these challenging times, the question arises: How can we innovate to not just manage, but strategically sequester waste, integrating it seamlessly into fresh product designs? The answer is Stackabl.

At Stackabl, we harness the power of cutting-edge, patent-pending design, processing, and production technologies. Our strategy is two-fold:

- We design, with precision, products centered around bulk textile waste streams, ensuring minimal post-processing.
- Through strategic partnerships with top-tier U.S. manufacturers, we secure premium industrial waste to create personalized acoustic lighting and furniture crafted efficiently from assembled waste materials.

Join us in redefining the waste narrative. Stackabl doesn't just recycle – we turn waste into wonders.
